The False Face Society is probably the best known of the medicinal societies among the Iroquois, especially for its dramatic wooden masks. The masks are used in healing rituals which invoke the spirit of an old hunch-backed man. Those cured by the society become members. Also, echoing the significance of dreams to the Iroquois, anyone who dreams that they should be a member of the society may join.

Tribal masks have long been a part of the traditional ceremonies of many Indigenous or Aboriginal tribes. The Inuit carve small masks to wear on their hands, the Hopi and other Pueblo people carve and paint wooden kachina masks for traditional dances, the Iroquois carve wood or corn husks to make “false face” masks, the Navajo and Apache make leather masks for dancing, and the Cherokee craft gourd masks for storytelling.
