In this approach the relevance of faith to the actual subject matter itself is not recognized. To be sure, having Christian educators is a necessary condition for Christian education, but it is not a sufficient condition. A third approach to Christian education is what I like to call the “discipline frosting” approach.

Seymour and Miller, with four other experts in the field, seek to clarify the agenda, resources, and hopes for Christian education in the twenty-first century. Gone are the days when Christian education was variously envisioned as a school, a home, an educational system, a mission agency, or a school for Christian living. These dreams revealed the conflicts Christian education was to face ...
